Sarah Brightman, Love And Deepspace

Some long for longevity
Before fading to dust
Some long for eternal sleep
And eulogy chanted by stars

Into that serenity
Their lost time forever buried
She rambled a thousand times
And million miles
Searching for her light

Free from the rule of death
Now seem so dull
Time goes by but memories rewind
Here she prays again
Back when things began

Where to go
Where they meet and grow old
Where no rivers would flow
No woods would grow
No life would never be ceased
Or somewhere they could start again
Where they would never be the same
Where rains everyday
Fain they would stay

Some forsake longevity
Then fading to dust
Some fall for eternal sleep
Their eulogies turn into gleaming stars

Will they meet in stars again
Or gone with the wind